An instrument formerly used to take altitudes, and to solve other problems of practical astronomy

The actual form and structure of the astrolabe of course varied greatly with the progress of astronomy, and the purposes for which the instrument was intended; its most complex form, as described by Tycho Brahe, passed into the modern EQUATORIAL. The chief types were a A portable ARMILLA, or arrangement of armillary circles.

b A planisphere, representing the circles of the heavens in the plane of the equinoctial, with movable sights.

c A graduated brass ring with movable label or index turning upon the centre, used simply to take altitudes (the Sea Astrolabe)

Astrology (ăstrŏ·lŏdʒĭ) Forms 4 astrologie, 4– astrology. [a F astrologie (14th c in Littré), ad L astrologia, a Gr. ἀστρολογία 'account of the stars,' f ἀστρολόγ-ος 'telling of the stars,' subst 'one who tells of the stars, an astronomer,' f ἄστρον star + -λογος speaking, telling, f λέγ-ειν to tell, speak. 'Αστρολόγος and ἀστρολογία were the earlier terms in Gr , subsequently ἀστρονόμος and ἀστρονομία were introduced see ASTRONOMY. Astrologia was likewise the earlier and pop word in L, where also astronomia took its place as the scientific term, while astrologia passed into the sense of 'star-divination' In OF and ME astronomie seems to be the earlier and general word, astrologie having been subseq introduced for the 'art' or practical application of astronomy to mundane affairs, and thus gradually limited by 17th c. to the reputed influences of the stars, unknown to science Not in Shakspere]

1 gen Practical astronomy; the practical application of astronomy as an art to human uses, esp (in later usage) to the prediction of events natural or moral

The original distinction between Astronomy the science, and Astrology the art, is clearly expressed by Gower Conf III 105-135 Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe was a work of 'astrology,' i e practical astronomy

'Astrology' was of two kinds

†a Natural Astrology the calculation and foretelling of natural phenomena, as the measurement of time, fixing of Easter, prediction of tides and eclipses, also of meteorological phenomena Obs

1375 Barbour Bruce iv 693 Astrology, Quhar throu clerkis May knaw coniunctione of planetis. c1391 Chaucer Astr I Prol 3 A gret part of the general rewles of theorik in astrologie 1570 Dee Math Pref 23 Astrologie, is an Arte Mathematicall 1669 Ib Hall Cæsars Comet iii 11 (1654 178 Naturall Astrology when it keepes it selfe within its due bounds is lawfull 1669 Worlidge Syst Agric (1681) 264 The use of this part of Astrology by the Farmer as by the Sayler

Thus sense (exc. in Hist) became obs. in 17th c, all the regular physical phenomena passing into the domain of Astronomy and those that continued the presumed influence of the moon and planets on the weather, etc, being called Astro-meteorology

b Judicial Astrology the art of judging of the reputed occult and non-physical influences of the stars and planets upon human affairs, star divination, astromancy (The only meaning of 'Astrology' since end of 17th c)

'Judiciary or Judicial Astrology which we commonly call simply Astrology is that which pretends to foretell moral events, i e such as have a dependence on the free will and agency of man as if that were directed by the stars. Chambers Cycl 1727

At is used to denote relations of so many kinds, and some of these so remote from its primary local sense, that a classification of its uses is very difficult Only a general outline can be here given, its idiomatic constructions with individual words must be looked for under the words themselves, e g Aim, Angry, Apt It will be observed that when a verb is construed with at, the same construction usually obtains with the cognate sb and adj, and when at is used with an adjective, it is generally used also with a derived sb, thus to envy, envy, envious at, apt, aptness at, etc The arrangement of the senses here adopted is —I Local position II Practical contact, engagement, occupation, condition, etc III Position in a series or graduated scale, rate, price, etc IV Time, order consequence, cause, object V In other adverbial phrases VI With the infinitive mood VII Followed by other prepositions

I Local position, answering the question Where? (passing into Whereby? Whence? Whither?)

At expresses the position reached by completed motion to, or that which is left by motion from lines drawn to a point, from a point, or through a point, meet or intersect at the point Hence, with certain verbs, at comes into contact with through, from, or of, to, and toward See 10 15 infra.

* Simple place or position

1 The most general determination of simple localization in space, expressing, strictly, the simple relation of a thing to a point of space which it touches, hence, usually determining a point or object with which a thing or attribute is practically in contact, and thus the place where it is, when this is either so small as to be treated as a mere point, or when the exact relation between the thing and the place is not more particularly expressed by the prepositions close to, near, by, about, on, in, over, under, etc, all of which may at times be covered by at

At, obsolete form of ATE, pa. t. of LAT

At- pref.[1] —OF at- The preposition AT in composition, with force of 'at, close to, to', frequent in OL., and returned in some words in ML., as at-standen to stand close to, 'withstand,' at-tach-en to reach to, get at, at-forc-en before, at hand-en behind. In the oldest Eng. the prefix was et- only when it bore the stress accent (e. in sbs. and adjs.), at-, (ap- ab-, when unaccented (in vbs. and prepositions); thus, æt-grâp grasping at, apprehensive, æt-grîpan, æt-gripan, to grip at, æt-bindan to beat to, bring, æt-lædan (Goth. at-aujan to show). Northumbrian had sometimes ed-, ad- cf ATEW. The forms ap-, ab-, seem to have arisen in an early assimilation of at to ap-, ab-, from and-, the old accented form of AND-, and-, occurring in the prep. ábí, the meaning of which was not far removed from that of at-, æt-. But in later OL. the strong form et- (MF. at- in south dial. et-) was extended to all compounds, without regard to the position of the stress. Mod. Eng. has lost all these compounds, exc. that attwixt survives in twixt. Alone is a modern formation of a different kind.

At- pref.[2] —OF æt- Representing earlier OF ap-, ab-, unaccented form of ábí 'away, from' (Gothic unpa- in unpa-pliuhan to flee away, G. ent- (in part), OHG. int-, in entflichen, OHG. int flohan, Du. ont- in ontvluchten to flee away). This ab-, ap-, from ábí, being phonetically levelled with ább from and-, and at- the unaccented form of æt- being assimilated to the latter (see prec.), these three prefixes ran together in form, and when at a later time the accented form æt- took the place of its own weak form at-, ap-, ab-, it also usurped the place of ab- from and-, and ab- from ábí-, unþ-. The last of these was by far the most frequent in use hence the most common sense of at prefix in ML., is 'from, away' = Gothic unpa, Ger. ent-, as in at-bear to bear away, at-flee to flee away, at-go to go away. As ábí, ap-, had nearly the same sense as æf-, of-, these verbs in at- often take the place of corresponding vbs in of-, as OF. ab-beran, at-beran, = of-beran to bear away, ML. at-come = OF. of-cyman to come off, escape, etc. Several new compounds of this type arose in ME., and it was even irregularly extended to Fr. words, as in ATSCAPE, refashioned from escape, OF escaper. All these are now obsolete

At- pref.[3], assimilated form of L. ad- to, before t, used in all modern words from Latin. In OF. ad-, at-, was reduced to a, and so introduced into ME., but afterwards refashioned as at-, after L. spelling, both in Fr. and English, e.g. L. attingĕre, OF. atendre, later attendre, ME. atandre, mod. at tender. The Ing. has also taken at where Fr. wrote simple a-, as in OF. atorné, mod. atourné, ME. atorney, mod. attorney. The t was also erroneously doubled in various words in at with [reduced] a- from other sources, as a(t)tame, a(t)tray, a(t)tire. See AD pref.

Ate (et, *acc*as ēt), pa t of Eat v

-ate, suffix[1], formerly at, forming sbs derived from L sbs in atus (ato- and atu-), stum ata and their modern Romanic representatives

1 In popular words which lived on into Orr, L atus, atum, became (through ato, ad), ad, e[1], et) é, as curatus, curatus, curatus, curatus, pe tum, Ob cur e, curat, est pché learned words, adapted from Latin, took at as in estat, prelat, primat magistrat After 13th c many of the popular words were refashioned with -at, as e sent atom ato it and all new words have been thus formed e g accassion it, attentat pt opat, palatinat profes orat syndi it In Eng these were originally adopted in their Fr form t tat prelat etc after 1400 e was added to mark the long vowel, estate, prelate etc, and all later words from Fr took ate at once After these, Eng words are formed directly on L ns tus 'curate' or on Eng analogies, as alderm in ate (cf triumvir ate) In meaning words in ate are chiefly a Substantives denoting office or function, or the persons performing it as mayorate, professorate, episcopate, syndicate, aldermanate b Participial nouns as delegate one deputed, prelate one preferred, mandate a thing commanded, precipitate what is thrown down e Chemical terms denoting salts formed by the action of an acid on a base, as nitrate acetate, sulphate arsonate, alcoholate ethylate In the 18th c chemists said plumbum acetatum 'acetated lead' lead acted on by vinegar, whence substantively a etatum the acetated (product), the 'acetate' of precipitate sublimate distillate (In the dog latin of pharmacy, acetas, salis is ignorantly put for acetatum)

2 In some words, ate I ate, ad L or It -ata, as in private frigate

-ate, suffix[2], formerly at, forming participial adjectives from L pa ppples in atus, -ata, -atum, being only a special instance of the adoption of I pa ppples by dropping the inflexional endings, e g content us contat us direct us, remiss us or with phonetic final e e g complat us, finit us, revolut us pass us The analogy for this was set by the survival of some I pa ppples in OF, as confus — confi us content — contentus, divers — diversus This analogy was widely followed in later Fr, in introducing new words from Latin, and both classes of Fr words, i e the popular survivals and the later accessions, being adopted in Eng provided Eng in its turn with analogies for adapting similar words directly from L, by dropping the termination This began about 1400, and as in -ATE[1] (with which this suffix is phonetically identical), L atus gave -at subsequently ate e g desolatus, desolat, desolate, separatus separat, separate Many of these participial adjectives soon gave rise to causative verbs, identical with them in form (see next), to which, for some time they did duty as pa ppples, as 'the land was desolat e by war,' but, at length, regular pa ppples were formed with the native suffix ed, upon the general use of which these earlier participial adjs generally lost their participial force and either became obs or remained as simple adjectives, as in 'the desolate land,' 'a compact mass' (But cf situate = situat e) So asperate, moderate, prostrate, separate, and (where a vb has not been formed), innate oblate ornate sedate, temperate etc As the Fr repr of L -atus is -é, English words in -ate have also been formed directly after Fr words in -é, e g affectionné, affectionate

2 As with Eng -ed I ppl adjs in atus were also formed on nouns, etc, when no other part of the vb was required, as cauda tail, caudatus tailed and often with negatives as sensus sense, insensatus unprovided with sense In modern times these have been liberally adopted in Eng, and on their analogy or that of corresponding Fr words in é, new words are constantly formed where L actually had not the formation, as apiculate f apiculus a little point, lunulate, f lunula little moon roseate, f roseus rosy ansate, ristate, f ansa, ristum narrow + folium leaf

3 Many words, originally adj, are also used substantively e g delegate, triplicate, precipitate, ruminate, alcoholate and have gone to reinforce the number of the earlier sbs in ATE[1] q v

-ate, suffix[3], a verbal formative, used to english L verbs of the first conjugation and to form Eng verbs on other L words or elements This use originated in the formation of verbs from the participial adjs in ate mentioned under ATE-

1 In Ol, verbs had been regularly formed on adjectives as hett h ltian, weam weamian, lysig lysian, dyrne dyrnan, etc With the loss of the inflexions these verbs became by the 15th c identical in form with the adjs, e g to white, warm lusy, dyrn empty dirty etc

2 In Latin vbs were also freely formed on adjectives as sacer sacrare, clarus clarare, liber liberare, vacuus vacuare This prevailed still more extensively in Fr e g sec scher, clair clarer, content contenter, confus confuser etc Hence also Eng received many verbs which by the 15th c were identical in form with their adjectives e g to clear humble manifest confuse, etc

3 On these analogies Eng adjectives formed from I pa ppples began generally, in the 16th c, to yield verbs of identical form e g adj direct vb to direct adj separate, vb to separate, adj aggravate vb to aggravate precisely analogous to adj lusy vb to lusy adj content, vb to content

4 These verbs, though formed immediately from participial adjectives already in English answered in form to the pa ppples of I verbs of the same meaning It was thus natural to associate them directly with these I verbs, and to view them as their regular Eng representatives

5 This once done, it became the recognized method of englishing a Latin verb, to take the ppl stem of the I as the present stem of the Eng, so that I ng verbs were now formed on L pa ppples by mere analogy and without the intervention of a participial adjective In accordance with this, fascinate conciliate associate, venerate and hundreds of others, have been formed directly on the participial stems of L fascinare, conciliare, associare, venerari, etc, without having been preceded by a cognate adjective In the case of many words introduced in the 16th c, evidence is wanting to show whether the vb was preceded by, or contemporaneous with the ppl adj in ate

6 These Eng vbs in ate correspond generally to Fr vbs in -er (—L are) as Eng separate, create, Fr s parer, créer this in its turn gave an analogy for the formation of Eng verbs from French, as Fr isoler (ad It isolare —L insulāre), Eng isolate, Fr féliciter, Eng felicitate

7 Latin vbs in -āre might, analogically, have been formed on many words, on which they were not actually formed wherever such a vb might have existed, a Fr vb in er, and an Eng vb in -ate, are liable to be formed Thus nōbilitas gave in L nōbilitare, the Eng representative of which is nobilitate, felicitas, which might have given felicitare, has given Fr féliciter and Eng felicitate, and capacitas, which might have given L capacitare and Fr capaciter, has actually given Eng capacitate Hence numerous modern verbs, as differentiate, substantiate, vaccinate, including many formed on modern or foreign words, as adipocerate, assassinate, camphorate, methylate

(It is possible that the analogy of native verbs in t, with the pa. ppple identical in form with the infinitive as set hit put cut, contributed also to the establishment of verbs like direct, separat e, identical with their pa. ppples)

4 A quality or character considered to belong to or be inherent in a person or thing, a characteristic quality

1836 7 Sir W Hamilton Metaph viii (1870) I 151 Attribute is a word properly convertible with quality for every quality is an attribute and every attribute is a quality, but in our language custom has introduced a certain distinction in their application Attribute is considered as a word of loftier significati n, and is therefore, conventionally limited to qualities of a higher application Thus, for example, it would be felt as indecorous to speak of the qualities of God, and as ridiculous to talk of the attributes of matter

(This distinction is hardly borne out by historical usage Originally, the qualities of God was preferred probably because men assumed no knowledge of the actual qualities of the Deity, but only of those more or less fitly attributed him, i e 'attributes in sense 1 But the exalted sense 2 may have associated itself with the expression in the minds of many who used it J A H M)

Historically and properly, the name of an extinct species of Wild Ox (Bos Urus Owen, B primigenius Boj), described by Cæsar as Urus, which formerly inhabited Europe, including the British Isles, and survived until comparatively recent times in Prussia, Poland, and Lithuania Since this became extinct, the name has often been erroneously applied to another species, the European Bison (Bos Bison Gesn, B bonasus Linn), still extant in the forests of Lithuania, in which sense it is used by some English naturalists

In early mod G aurox, auroch, was still applied to the Urus and only since its disappearance in 17th c has been popularly misapplied to the Bison in which sense it was unfortunately adopted by some naturalists before the facts were known More recent auth rs have sought to remedy the mistake by introducing the form Ur ox (MHG ûr ochse) for the Urus while retaining Auroch for the Bison but as Urox and Aurochs are only the earlier and later form of the same name this is historically indefensible and the only accurate nomenclature to distinguish the two animals as Urus (or Urox) and Bison improperly called Aurochs See Schade Altdeutsch Wörterbuch, Boyd Dawkins, Fossil Brit Oxen in Q Jrnl Geol Soc XXII 1 333

5 A luminous atmospheric phenomenon, now considered to be of electrical character, occurring in the vicinity of, or radiating from, the earth's northern or southern magnetic pole and visible from time to time by night over more or less of the adjoining hemisphere, or even of the earth's surface generally popularly called the Northern or Southern) Lights, merry dancers, streamers, etc

The northern lights being alone conspicuous in Europe had from the earliest pen ds vari us popular names in the northern languages they began to attract scientific attention early in the 17th c, and were described by Gassendi in 1621 under the descriptive appellation of aurora borealis or 'northern dawn' their simple form suggesting the appearance of dawn or approaching sunrise on the northern horizon this appellation occasionally varied as aurora septentrionalis) passed into general scientific use On the recognition of similar phenomena in the antarctic regions these were called aurora australis or 'southern lights', whence aurora is now used generically as the proper term for the phenomenon, without any thought of dawn, and with English plural auroras, and this has become the ordinary prose meaning of aurora the preceding senses being only poetical

1621 [1822 Burrows Cycl] On Sept and 1621 the same phenomenon was seen all over France and it was particularly described by Gassendus in his Apsyxis who gave it the name of aurora borealis 1727 Phil Trans XXX 584 On February the 5th 1716 7 at Night at Night, an Aurora Borealis appeared 1787 Sir Chambers Cycl, Aurora Borealis or Aurora Septentrionalis the northern dawn, or light is an extraordinary meteor or luminous appearence, shewing it self in the night time, in the northern part of the heavens. 1741 Phil Trans XLI 744 title An account of the Aurora Australis observed at Rome January 17 1740 1788 Burns Works II 183 Last she sublimes th Aurora of the poles, The flashing elements of female souls. 1823 Moore Fables, Holy Alliance 120 A dome of frost work Which shone by moonlight—as the tale is—Like an aurora borealis. 1838 Sir J Ross N W Pass xiv 216 There was an aurora at night. 1852 W Grove Contrib Sc 359 In air rarefied by the air pump an aurora or discharge of five or six inches long could be obtained 1859 Scoffern Pract Meteorol 98 After 1790 auroras became unfrequent, but since 1825 they have been on the increase 1868 Lockyer Heat eus 211 Lit up by auroræ and long lingering twilights 1870 R Ferguson Electr 37 The appearance of auroras is invariably accompanied by magnetic irregularities

G P Marsh, Notes and Additions to Wedgwood. The variant Arabic form awārī (whence Eng arāria, avarria, above) as well as original correspondence of meaning, suggests a connexion with It. avaria.—see AVERAGE sb in fact Mr Marsh proposed the derivation of the latter from this word. But on the other hand, the various and uncertain forms of the word in Arabic may be merely adaptations of Fr avarie or It avaria, assimilated to native words or roots (e.g. awār=corruption, injustice, hawāra=contempt, etc.) The plur awwārī is now in popular use in Syria, to express government exactions, the singular sg ifying aid, help, just as benevolence in Europe sometimes meant a compulsory tax (Marsh) The word has been adopted in It. and Pg in the transferred sense It avanía 'an undeserved wrong, a secret grudge, an insulting injury' (Florio), Pg avania 'wrong, injury (Vieyra)]

Aver, obs form of A-FIRE and EVER

Aver-, in some compound terms pertaining to feudal usage, appears to be connected with AVERAGE sb 1 Of these terms, we have only the explanations (usually inferences from the assumed derivation) offered by legal editors of 16th and 17th centuries, which are of very doubtful value —

†1 Aver corn. ? Corn paid as a feudal due or in lieu of service

[1263 Charter in Thorn Chron 1912/2 Quoddam servitium annuum quod avercorn vocatur sub mensura minus certa] 1670 BLOUNT Law Dict Aver-corn, is such Corn, as by Custom is brought by the Tenants Carts or Carriages to the Lords Granary or Barn ? 1695 KENNETT Glos, Aver corn a reserved rent in corn paid to religious houses by their tenants or farmers.

Early explanations evidently treated avera as latinized form of OF aver, averr work Sir J Skene referred it to aver beast of burden and so explained the meaning but his proposed explanation (since rejected in the Law Dicts) is hardly supported by the early use of averagium and OF average Danish hovert 'average soccage-duty, suggested by Wedgwood is (with its Romance suffix) a more recent word than averagium, and not possibly its source Mr C I Elton, from the actual use of avera, is disposed to revert to the ideas of the derivation from OF aver, averr, its form being perhaps affected by the use of avere, aver for property and cattle He compares averagium with F pourvoir and med.L. operagium]

Some kind of service due by tenants to the feudal superior Explained in the Law Dictionaries, since Sir J Skene, as 'service done by the tenant with his beasts of burden' (see above) Known chiefly in the phrase 'arriage and carriage,' retained in Scotch leases till 20 Geo II, but having in later times no definitely ascertained meaning

The Eng auerays (plural) in Arnold's Chron (if not a misprint) was probably meant for the F word, the form average (also in Arnold's Chron) is confined to English, and evidently formed on the model of lodemanage (pilotage), primage, etc

4 The incidence of any such charge, expense, or loss, esp the equitable distribution of expense or loss, when of general incidence, among all the parties interested, in proportion to their several interests.

Particular Average is the incidence of the partial loss or damage of ship, cargo, or freight, through unavoidable accident, upon the individual owners (or insurers) of these respective interests

General Average is apportionment of loss caused by intentional damage to ship e g cutting away of masts or boats) or sacrifice of cargo and consequent loss of freight, or of expense incurred by putting into a port in distress, by acceptance of towage or other services, to secure the general safety of ship and cargo, in which case contribution is made by the owners (or insurers) of ship, cargo and freight in proportion to the value of their respective interests.

(In connexion with Maritime Law and Marine Insurance this has come to be the prevailing sense of the word Its first known occurrence is in the 14th c Civil Statute of Catano (Pardessus V 97), where it is enacted that anything given as a present or 'Christmas box (pro strena), or paid in tribute (pedocia), with the consent of the majority, for the good of the vessel, shall be shared by way of average (illud de id tibur per averiacum) Cf quot 1603 1727)

[Few words have received more etymological investigation see Diez, Dozy, Littré, Wedgwood, E Müller Skeat, etc, and especially the fruitful researches of the late G P Marsh in the American edition of Wedgwood (New York 1862) The latter has conclusively shown that, as a maritime term, avaria, averia, was first used in the Mediterranean and that its original meaning was duty charged upon goods In connexion with this cf also quotations from Muratori Chron Parmense (in Du Cange s v Averia), e g Consules debent levare lembum Averiæ ad excipiendos productos galeones, they went on board the averiæ cutter to intercept the aforesaid galleons These results quite dispose of the two derivations suggested in Diez from Ger hafen haven, and Arab awâr loss, damage the latter being merely a mod Arabic translation and adaptation of the western term in its latest sense Mr Marsh s connexion of the word with the Arabic or Turkish avani s, avania is of great weight but as said under Avania, that word is more probably adopted from the Franks. May not averia be a derivative of It avere OF aveir, property goods (see Aver sl , in sense of 'charge on property or goods ? Compare such terms as tenure poundage toll tage charge on pollo) The chief difficulty lies in the early lat. form averia, not aveiria, and Fr avarie the Catalan has however been averis sm e 13th c see Marsh on 'sp and Catalan use of the word and Averi, Avaria in Du Cange It is to be noted that Ob avariewas used of other than maritime dues or charges in a document dated Nimes, 18 March 1468, in De Mas Latrie, Histoire de Chypre III 276 the owner of a mill is bound de paier l ensengne (= cens) de l abaie de Bibi, et tout autre avarie que le dit moulin paie aujourdhui Cf also certain uses of ar rage in Godefroy]

Awning (ɔ̃ ning). Also (? yawning). [? Awn sb. + -ing.] A word of obscure origin, apparently at first only in nautical use. Probably to be referred (as by Wedgwood) to Fr. auvent 'a penthouse of cloth, etc. before a shop window, etc.' Cotgr., early plurals in l. ittle awuns, awuans, med.L. auvanna, auvannus, whence auvan*, auven*, avon the termination is of course Eng. -ing. E. Muller refers it to Low German havenung, f. haven harbour, in sense of 'a shelter from wind and weather'. Skeat compares 'Pers. dwan dwang, anything suspended, awangan hanging, awnang a clothes-line', but neither of these is applied in its own language to an awning, in particular an oriental origin seems incompatible with the history. F. auvent is itself of doubtful etymol. See Diez Littré, Du Cange.]

1 A roof like covering of canvas or similar material, used as a shelter from sun, rain, etc. esp. above the deck of a vessel.

Of med.L. baccalārius only a few late instances occur (in sense 1), which might be from the mod langs (see Du Cange, Bacularii). It was, however prob. connected with baccalāria, a division of land, of which the size and nature varied at different times and with the adjectives baccalarius, -aria applied in 8th c. to rustics male and female who worked for the colonus or tenant of a manens (See Deloche, Cartulaire de Beaulieu Introd éclairc. xxii). But the precise relation of baccalārii* to these words, and its subsequent history, are still uncertain. Still more doubtful is its derivation. baccalarius is with some probability referred to bacca, late L. and Romanic for vacca cow, through bacculis* (cf ovillis from ovis sheep), in which case it might be 'grazing farm, and baccalarius one employed on it, the assistant of a colonus who had not a manens of his own , Littré (without accounting for the sense) suggests Celtic bachall stick (a. L. baculus), the Welsh bach 'little' must be definitely discarded, its old Celtic form being bicc- or becc-, Irish becc (Thurneysen)]

Back- in comb is used in many relations, substantive, adjective and adverbial (rarely verbal) often difficult to separate, and in various senses In some of these the combination is very loose, the use of the hyphen being almost optional

This is especially the case when back is capable of being viewed as an adj, which aspect the hyphen would not be used, e g back yard or back yard back stroke or back stroke As a rule, the use of the hyphen implies that the combination (in the case in point) has not the general and purely descriptive value of the two words, but is in some respect specialized or appropriated as a specific name

[Note Conjectures as to the derivation, and possible connexion with next word, depend greatly upon the original meaning On the assumption that this was 'corn merchant' bager ladger has been identified with obs F bladier, 'a Marchant or Ingrosser of Corne, Cotgr (properly Provençal OF blaver, blayer), but this is phonetically inadmissible If, however, we assume bager to represent a ME blager*, with l unaccountably lost, this might represent an OF blagier* f blange (blaage, blaadge) harvest, corn supply, feudal due paid in corn, f ble, blad in med L bladum corn, wheat (See H Nicol Proc Philol Soc 19 Dec 1879) But no such links between F blange and Eng bager are found either in F or Eng, so that these are in positively no evidence connecting badger with any deriv of F ble And indeed a consideration of the whole (46) quotations which we have for the word leads to the conviction that the bager, badger, had no essential connexion with corn, any more than the rider, kidder, or carrier, named along with him in the statutes Proclamations and law books. At present it is most in accordance with the facts to take badger as the agent noun from BADGE v.].

Badger (bæ·dʒəɹ), sb.[1] Also 6 bageard, 6–7 badgerd [Only mod Eng of doubtful origin Prob (as E Muller suggests) from BADGE sb + -ARD, in reference to the white mark borne like a badge on its forehead: cf for the sense BAUSON and BALD sb.[1], for the formation BALDARD

Most etymologists have assumed the identity of this with the prec word, citing the presumed analogy of the mod F name of the quadruped, blaireau, in 15th c. blereau, taken as a dim of blaret, meaning 'little corn merchant or corn hoarder,' an appellation arising out of popular notions of the habits of the animal, 'which, it is said, makes away with much buck wheat' Littré). But this derivation seems to be erroneous. No OF blaëret*, representing a L blādā vellus*, from blādāmen, is found. And it seems certain that OF blaireau (12 13th c.), later blereau, blairoun in Flanders blairiau, blariau in Normandy blureil, blerel, compared with OF blasle, blaire the bald coot, mod F dial (Flanders, Picardy) blirie, blairie (Normandy) bleru must be referred to MDu and Flem blaer bald MDu blaere, Flem blaere, Du blaar a white spot on the fore head of an animal Blesraan thus corresponds exactly to blaso and its analogy strongly favours the derivation of badger from badge.]

Bail (bēl), sb 1 Also 5 bayll, baill, 5–7 bayle, 6 7 bayl, bale, baile [In senses 1 and 2, a OF. bail power, custody, jurisdiction,' and 'delivery,' n of action f bailler, in its senses of 'take charge of, guard, control,' and 'hand over, deliver' (see Bail v 1) The remaining senses are peculiarly English, and their development not quite certain But from the Latin phrase tradere in ballium alicui, found 1269, and the Af lesser en bail (1331), it seems that latl was originally related to sense 1, and meant the 'custody or charge' (i e of the surety), cf also the equivalent mainprise, manu captio But it must soon have been associated in meaning with sense 2, and the Af bailler to deliver (chattels), since already in 16th c it was explained as 'the delivery or handing over of the accused to his surety,' whence transferred to the security in consideration of which he was so delivered, and finally to the surety himself who became or gave security for his reappearance in court when called for judgment There is nothing approaching these senses in Fr, while, on the other hand the Fr sense 'lease' is not in English

Fr bail, the n of action, must be carefully distinguished from bail' governor, ruler, tutor, guardian (= Pr baile Sp. baile Pg baixo, It baile, balio —L. bajulus) never adopted in English (though sometimes erroneously stated to be the direct source of sense 6) Bail = bājulus was the primary word thence the vb. bailler = bājulare thence again the n of action bail formed in French, and adopted in English. (The word is discussed by Cokr 4th Inst 178)

6 The person or persons who procure the release of a prisoner from the custody of the officer arresting him, or from prison, by becoming surety for his appearance in court for trial

The bail now becomes answerable with his money, but formerly he might have to give his own person as security, whence the phrase to be or become bail, i.e. security, as opposed to give or put in bail of sense 5

▶ In consequence of the transition of meaning in senses 3–6, many phrases are current which are not easily analysed 'To say that the magistrate bails the prisoner (see Bail v 1 2) is now somewhat old fashioned. Generally, the magistrate accepts bail, admits to bail, allows bail, or (occasionally) holds to bail, or takes bail. I have also seen grants bail The regular phrase of the Statute books is I think, 'the magistrate may take bail.' In 15 Geo III, c. 50, the magistrate also takes bail, the prisoner gives bail Bail is also offered by the prisoner, and may be refused by the magistrate, on the day appointed his bail surrender, render, bring in, or produce him in court, or the accused surrenders to his bail In the latter phrase there is a notion of his delivering himself up as in charge of the recognizances into which he himself as well as his sureties, has entered for his appearance This idea also colours the later use of hold to bail admit to bail (F W Maitland.)
